Functional Requirements  Functional Requirements  The workshop leader should be able to register in the system using an email the first time they log in.  The administrator will be able to register users so that they can access the company's database from the system. This will be done using the user's email and assigning a password.  The administrators and employees will be able to recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software must have an adaptive and intuitive interface, with a user-friendly learning curve, meaning that it does not require a significant time investment in learning.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software must have an adaptive and intuitive interface, with a user-friendly learning curve, meaning that it does not require a significant time investment in learning.  The software must have an adaptive and intuitive interface, with a user-friendly learning curve, meaning that it does not require a significant time investment in learning.  The software must have an adaptive and intuitive interface, with a user-friendly learning curve, meaning that it does not require a significant time investment in learning.  The software must have an adaptive and intuitive interface, with a user-friendly learning curve as significant time investment in learning.  The software must have an adaptive and intuitive interface, with a user-friendly learning curve as significant time
The workshop leader should be able to register in the system using an email the first time they log in.  The administrator will be able to register users so that they can access the company's database from the system. This will be done using the user's email and assigning a password.  The administrators and employees will be able to recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	Requirements Table the system using an email the first time they log in.  The administrator will be able to register users so that they can access the company's database from the system. This will be done using the user's email and assigning a password.  The administrators and employees will be able to recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store usiness service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	Functional Requirements	Non-Functional Requirements
The administrator will be able to register users so that they can access the company's database from the system. This will be done using the user's email and assigning a password.  The administrators and employees will be able to recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software must have an adaptive and intuitive interface, with a user-friendly learning curve, meaning that it does not require a significant time investment in learning.  The administrators and employees will be able to require a significant time investment in learning.  The software must have an adaptive and intuitive interface, with a user-friendly learning curve, meaning that it does not require a significant time investment in learning.  The administrators and employees will be able to receive finitive interface, with a user-friendly learning curve, meaning that it does not require a significant time investment in learning.  The software must have a user-friendly learning curve, meaning that it does not require a significant time investment in learning.  The significant time investment in learning.  The software must have a segminate tideous not require a significant time investment in learning.  The software must have a user-friendly learning curve, meaning that it does not require a significant time investment in learning.		· that they can access the company's database from the system. This will be done using the user's email and assigning a password.  The administrators and employees will be able to recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the the system. This will be done using the user's email and assigning a password.  The administrators and employees will be able to recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the		*
The administrators and employees will be able to recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	*	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
The administrators and employees will be able to recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	·
The administrators and employees will be able to recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	and assigning a password.	- recover their passwords using their entered email address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the		learning.
address.  User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	_ · · User accounts will not be able to access the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the functions of administrator accounts; for instance, they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the they will not be able to register other users in the system.  The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the
The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the
The system will have a database containing customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	• customers' personal data. It should be able to store the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	· the customer's name, phone number, address, and email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·
email, as well as their vehicle information (make, model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	* model, VIN number, license plates, and mileage).  The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	_
The software will have the capability to store business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · business service orders created by users. Each order can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the can include the type of service provided, the customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	A 7 customer's name, the service date, the mechanic's name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	• name in charge of the order, the parts used, and the final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	• final cost.  The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the
The user should have access to the account settings, where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the where they can decide how they will receive notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the notifications from the system in their inbox.  Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the Users can mark service orders as completed when finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · finishing the task. In this state, all entered data will be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the be permanent and not modifiable by the user.  The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	•
The workshop leader will be able to view the following performance indicators in the system: the	- following performance indicators in the system: the
	*
number of vehicles that entered, the reason for their	number of vehicles that entered, the reason for their entry, and total earnings.	entry, and total earnings.

MoSCoW

Must Have

Fundamental requirements for the system to function properly.

Should Have

Non-essential requirements for the system to function, but without them, quality would be compromised.

Could Have

Requirements that serve as small, easy-to-add improvements.

Will not Have

Requirements that will not be added to the system.